ten don these sweeping gowns many a senson too soon, and in after years regret that they thus early assumed the garb of womanhood, for, strange as it FALL AND WINT may seem, a girl's age is reckoned from the time she puts on her real long gown. Of course, this style must needs make a change in her demeanor, for no matter how coltish one may feel, the environment of long cloth breadths will effectually put a stop to the frisky action of early girlhood; therefore, a new deportment comes with the lengthened skirt.

The hair likewise from being allowed to flow loosely acts in inverse ratio to the skirt and is taken up higher on the head, until the little girl of yesterday becomes the young lady of to-day, whose age might be anywhere from seventeen to twenty-one. Girls, don't be in a hurry to put on long dresses think of the years you will have to wear them, and cling to youth and all its accessories as long as possible, for at the Stenography and Type-writing Bureau, best it is gone too soon, though now, in your desire to become full fledged women, who have so many enjoyments from which you, owing to your youth, are debarred, you cannot realize the truth of such a statement. When the dolls are put away, the long dresses donned, WILLIAM H. FOWLE BECKHAM, and the society manners replace the childish, unaffected simplicity of other days, your girlhood is over, and though in later years you may long once more for that period so replete with happi-ness it will have vanished forever with the simple gowns you now so utterly
